Aluminum Furniture and Frames

Aluminum is one of the lightest engineering metals, having strength to weight ratio superior to steel. Aluminum has a density around one third that of steel or copper making it one of the lightest commercially available metals. Aluminum is well suited to cold environments. It has the advantage over steel in that itsa™ tensile strength increases with decreasing temperatures while retaining its toughness. When exposed to air, a layer of aluminum oxide forms almost instantaneously on the surface of aluminum. This layer has excellent resistance to corrosion.
